

The screenshot shows the Immunity Debugger interface. The top pane displays assembly code for a function named `sub byte ptr ds:[rax],al`. The bottom pane shows a memory dump of the `000001A0FF11049` address, displaying hex and ASCII values. A yellow arrow points to a `pushing` instruction in the assembly view, and a red arrow points to a `original` instruction in the same view.

The screenshot shows the Immunity Debugger interface. The top pane displays assembly code for a function named `sub byte ptr ds:[rax],al`. The bottom pane shows a memory dump of the `00000246FCF1A1F8` address, displaying hex and ASCII values.

mov rsi, 00000246FCES0000

The screenshot shows the Immunity Debugger interface. The top pane displays assembly code for a function named `sub byte ptr ds:[rax],al`. The bottom pane shows a memory dump of the `00000246FCF1A1F8` address, displaying hex and ASCII values. A yellow arrow points to a `pushing` instruction in the assembly view, and a red arrow points to a `original` instruction in the same view.

Dans le dump
00000246FCES0000 = cracker par allice

The screenshot shows the Immunity Debugger interface. The top pane displays assembly code for a function named `sub byte ptr ds:[rax],al`. The bottom pane shows a memory dump of the `00000246FCF1A1F8` address, displaying hex and ASCII values. A yellow arrow points to a `pushing` instruction in the assembly view, and a red arrow points to a `original` instruction in the same view.

Essayer d'enlever le deuxième nag screen !!